2: It's a vacuum cleaner face the processor, but no vacuum-cleaner-face. 3: Adobe Bridge standalone opening in the background. 4: Version listed as Photoshop "24.0". Adobe Photoshop Review: Yes, this is the new name. Not "Photoshop" (was), not 20Zero (Number), not "24.0" (Version), but "24.0.0.1" . Admittedly the new name is silly, and it's effectively the same as 20Zero, which encourages people to question the version ("get it right" or "upgrade to 20Zero" - "24.0.0.1", "24.0.0.2",...). 6: none of the new features have anything to do with photography, and they're making it harder to get at a photo-based workflow. The only new "photo" feature I can find is the "Expression Strip". 7: It's a big cleanup effort, including everything from the user interface to the internal processes of Photoshop. The upgrade is the long overdue consolidation of Photoshop's functionality. 8: Object Selection-based for now (and maybe the future?) 9: Lots of new color mode options 10: but the other new Features like the "hair" stuff is not really new... and shouldn't have been named "Magenta". Adobe Photoshop Review: The biggest changes lie in the Develop module, however. Unfortunately, I didn't have time to test it completely. However, I've run into issues that I haven't seen with Lightroom before, which are detailed below. I've also seen issues such as no Touch-up Brush in the Brush Tool (although I do love the new Color Overlay dialog), and in the Curves Tool, the grey area in the Y-axis of the Curves dialog area will not lighten up when I drag the slider, and instead stays at 50%. I'll have to test this further, but I'm a bit concerned it's a bug.
