the real-time fireflies as they happen can help you discover the things that matter most right now. explore new cities, see what others are watching right now, and connect with people from every corner of the globe at once. when you want to know what's going on, just ask and find out. the idea behind google now is simple. information is at your fingertips, so you don't have to search again for something you know is there. you can ask google now to provide directions, look up sports scores, see the price of gas around you, get health tips, and search for movies and shows playing near you. on the web, google now shows relevant web pages and web apps right in the search results. so, if you're looking for a movie to watch, nearby restaurants and movies will pop up in google search. you can also use google now to make it easier to find the things that are important to you—like your calendar and your contacts, and things that you look up often, like maps, movie times, and your flight itinerary. web surfing on the apple tv wasn't a dream, either. it was surprisingly well-integrated with the apple.com home page; searching for a specific movie or tv show launched apple's movie finder in itunes, and the apple tv homepage shows an optimized page for the movie or show. seeking out a particular movie on the apple tv was a snap: just select a show or movie from the movies or tv shows list and, if you have an apple tv in your room, select av family from the list to find it, or if you have one of the new models, select amazon video-only from the list. behind the scenes, the apple tv may be a souped-up television, but it's smarter than many tvs. the av family option in the apple tv is limited to the apple tv's hard drive — it won't recognize hard drives or other media sources like a pc or mac — and the search feature takes advantage of a 250-song home library. for my setup, that was ample and this isn't to say apple didn't place valuable bloatware on the apple tv, as some models now do.
