To evaluate the impact of chronic fatigue syndrome (CFS) on sexual function, and to identify factors associated with sexual dysfunction in CFS patients. One hundred and eighty-four consecutive female CFS patients completed detailed assessments of demographic and clinical information and the Female Sexual Function Index (FSFI). Results were compared with a demographically matched sample of controls. Fisher's exact test, Chi-square and Student's t tests were used to analyse dichotomous or continuous variables. Sixty-four (35.2%) CFS patients and 42 (23.4%) controls reported sexual dysfunction. Significant associations were found between the presence of CFS and being single, experience of relationship problems, family history of sleep disorders and history of depression/suicide attempt. Significant associations were also found between sexual dysfunction and being under 60 years of age, single, experiencing relationship problems, family history of sleep disorders, female sexual function lubrication score in the lowest quartile and not having a partner. Chronic fatigue syndrome is associated with sexual dysfunction and lowered sexual function but not with sexual desire impairment.25 3 3 3 1 9
