I don't know anything about music or sound effects in video games, but I did feel that a game with that combination of elements deserved it's own soundtrack. That's why I decided to make a soundtrack for Tangle Tower with the help of the Budapest Art Orchestra. The game is not entirely accurate to the actual game, but it will help you to better understand the world of Tangle Tower. It will add to the atmosphere and further the story by letting you feel more what it is like to be in that world. The original music was mainly just over-the-top, bombastic epic in the same vein as stuff like The Lord of the Rings. I thought that a lot of that stuff was an ideal accompaniment to the game, so I ended up using a lot of the same techniques. The ending sections will actually be played as a kind of piano piece, because the other instruments just didn't fit the mood. Also, the original music was just so big and loud that I wanted to have something a bit more subdued for the end of the game. The music is played with the Budapest Art Orchestra, a Hungarian string orchestra. The typical instrumentation for them is violins, violas, cellos, and double basses, although they can play everything from the traditional instruments to saxophones, trumpets and electric guitars. The strings of the orchestra are played with the bowed string technique, so the sound of the music is extremely aggressive. This gives it a completely different feel than the more symphonic music of many other video games. I hope you enjoy the soundtrack and find it atmospheric, exciting, or whatever, as I did while composing and arranging it. That's why it exists. Game Features Tangle Tower Soundtrack: One music track,
