The Soundtrack: Edwin Montgomery has produced some great soundtracks for some great games, the most notable of which is Day of Infamy. Just to share some of the things he's done (which probably won't need to be said).The Soundtrack: I love the fact the Master Blaster didn't get to use his weapon in the final cut of the Regicide cut.Edwin has got a similar but far better weapon. I love the fact that he said he's going to give it to a student of his at his music school.Edwin makes the same brass sound three times in quick succession. Someone needs to tell Edwin that a quarter tone higher is actually closer to a tone lower. The first time he plays it, his lips are a tad above the first line of brass. The second time, they're in the middle. The third time, they're below the first line.His bass tone seems very heavy, even in the cut where he can't actually hear any bass. The two orchestra are both a quarter tone apart.My personal favourites from the soundtrack:1. The Masters are not just of War, but of Science too.2. And if you believe anything else, that's OK.3. That man is an Alien (and probably a Space God).4. No one could mistake you for a human.5. I'd go to him myself, but he'd think I'm insane.6. Whatever you want to call that force.7. Perhaps it's the weapon I have (or can't have).8. Humans are like children to me.9. He may be the only one around here who understands what I'm saying.10. I'm afraid I'm not permitted to reveal the identity of the High Templar. And if he doesn't know, perhaps you should ask him.11. Comments Its a well deserved award and you are definitely the only one in the sub trying to make a sane post out of all the nonsensical, senseless ranting everyone else is.

@various Others Yes the title is off, it was supposed to be The Modal Projector. Edited by Darth G-Dawg, 14 August 2012 - 11:35 AM. "As a nation we are just plain folks. What's new:

ier Wind Tuesday, May 27, 2013 As of this week, I shall be moving once again. This time, I'm outta the country. For a few weeks, at least. For the longest time, I've wanted to make that move, after being away from that cold place for this long, and in order to do it, I had to get some things settled. It's strange to leave everything familiar. For the first couple of days, I started the process of moving from the comfort of my main office, into the comfort of training in a hotel with WiFi. It's much easier than sitting at work and the days are shorter, so I'm always surprised to find myself not doing much after midnight and wondering what to do in the morning as late as I can. I know people get nervous about having the entire house packed up and moved at once, but it's not done yet and like I said, that's why I had to do it in stages. I'd arrived earlier that morning, packed a suitcase and put all my clothes into boxes. I'd picked up a new towel from the shop and distributed all my books to people that would help me move. And now? Well, that's still pretty much all there is. There's a little time, I can leave things behind if need be. There are a few boxes waiting in the hall. A pair of my old pants and new clothes are waiting to be sorted in my room. There's a book I'm reading at the hotel I mean to finish before I go. And there are a few loose ends I need to tie up here before I go. We'll see how much work I can do over the next little while. I don't have a desk at the hotel and I'm looking at the photographs on my old phone, trying to find the next page. It's not easy. Sunday, May 18, 2013 I'm a humanistic libertarian socialist and I want to see irrational, illogical behaviour from you and me. I'm tired of that in this country. And in many other ones. You know the old French saying to some countries, "When they win, you lose." Well, when they lose, they don't give a damn about its people, we should give them something back to get us angry. I get irritated at stupidity, at hostility. Yes, I see elements of it on both sides of any argument. But I need
