The only good thing going for Adobe that I could see when reviewing the Adobe Creative Cloud Photography & Design update was the opportunity to submit your work to various competitions. Prior to this update, there wasn't an easy way to be seen. If you wanted to share your work, you'd have to create your own website and maybe even put in a pinch of coin with a domain name if doing so was free. This is no longer the case, and, if your work is good enough, you can be sure it will be noticed.

A subscription to the service may be necessary for the time being, but regardless of that, the content sharing is a great feature to have. Other useful additions are the ability to create and swap shape layers, being able to control the size of your own monitor, and a small performance increase for Smart Sharpen that renders sharper images from the shadows. ABOVE: A clean sense of perspective, achieved with the ability to scale layers, is seen in this three-dimensional cityscape from the Ship Shelter Expansion Exhibit (image courtesy of the Stephen V. Foster School of Music, University of Washington), using the Creative Cloud app on an iPhone 7 Plus via Apple AirPods. The performance boost is great, but it could be better. Most noticeable is the new brush engine, which is said to be optimized for speed. Pressing the cmd+3 shortcut also opens the brush engine, for speed. Speed is a great thing when dealing with images this large, but you'll notice a slight delay before the brush engine loads. That's not to say that the brush engine is slow though, as I found the algorithms to be optimized for speed. However, this isn't impacting the speed that much, and there are some frame rate hiccups in Lightroom.

"We continue to explore new ways to help creative professionals and everyday photographers get more out of Photoshop. Share for Review gives Photoshop the power of collaborative editing, while the new one-action Delete and Fill tool lets users get things done in a snap," explained John Nack, senior product manager, Adobe Creative Cloud. "Designing and creating images requires a delicate balance between art and science. Our goal is to help bring the best of both worlds together. Content creation tools can be too complex, and creative design tools can be inaccessible. With Share for Review, designers can collaborate on images while working from any device any time," added Dallas Vaughan, chief experience officer, Adobe. Adobe Photoshop also includes new technologies such as AI and Photoshop Web Services (PWS), delivering new capabilities to users around the globe. With Share for Review, more content is created on the web than ever. All content is connected, and that includes collaboration and connection with other apps such as Microsoft Office, Notes, and Sketch. Photos can be discussed on channels and be moved from desktop to mobile to the web. Users can also easily share content on brands like Pinterest and WhatsApp. Photoshop Help files now include comments on use cases and type of feature being discussed. Content can be copied between Photoshop and other apps, and more images can be edited directly from mobile apps. PWS content can be edited offline, eliminating time spent on plane mode, even when Wi-Fi isn't available.

IMAGE: Adobe has made the world's most advanced image editing software even smarter, more collaborative and easier to use across surfaces.
