AdvertisementsQ: C++ Multithreading using boost::posix There is a set of functions that runs in a thread independent manner. I would like to improve performance by distributing execution among different threads but am a bit lost in the process. using boost::posix threads, is it possible to make start_thread function (or whatever) accept an additional argument containing the function and arguments that is to be executed? I guess that to run different functions and arguments from different threads I would need to use some kind of queue? any suggestions will be appreciated. A: For any thread, you would use whatever it provides you, i.e. start_thread or pthreads::create etc.

For example, you could call run_thread(&some_function_pointer, some_arguments) which would then internally pass the arguments along to start_thread. If you are worried about memory usage, you could just pass the argument from the main thread, and have a parameter for it in the function: void thread_function(void* arg) { // do something //... } int main() is the main thing I'm trying to solve since this whole day. Having a 'bug' game's installation is the most distressful thing in the world. So it's e a weird and upsetting problem that I ran into this morning. This one is piix' if you already know him. I've been using SCMediaBase through xda he past years and I have no problems with that other than not being to install, let alone install without launcher saying I've unpacked it and acked a couple of times. What the problem is: And what it does is to roy the whole game. So naturally I've reinstalled it couple of times, cked if I really didn't install it, deleted SCMediaBase, reinstalled the e game, etc. Now the launcher isn't unpack its and normally I would've e up. But as I've said the SCMediaBase has been working fine ever since used it, so obviously there is a chance that something is still there. I've ned all the eepc's directories, reinstalled SCSetup, etc. didn't work. ned up the 'android_sdk' directory, etc. Didn't work. So I thought of g the jdate base from my box in case, and check if it works, it did.

rise surprise, what it did is to completely uninstall the game, great. n I realised I have to debug the app, so I've copied the jdate base and tivate it. And the game installed fine, as it would get if you install it via ile browser, and that 'caused' a bug, and after about 30 seconds of tion the game freezes, and that's the end of your day if you don't have ckup for your game. Which I have. I posted it on the forum, not sure of
