www.firemagazine.in (English).Integrated circuits are typically manufactured by mounting one or more integrated circuits to a package substrate. The package substrate typically includes multiple layers, and is designed to mount the integrated circuits in a particular way, using input/output pins in a particular way, and using particular materials to create certain features of the integrated circuit. The package substrate includes conductive traces, or "signal lines," that electrically couple the integrated circuits with other elements of a circuit such as other integrated circuits, circuit boards, or other electronic devices. The signal lines often include multiple layers and may be distributed in a particular way between the different layers. For example, a package substrate may include a plurality of signal lines that distribute a first set of signals from the integrated circuit to a second set of signals that are accessible by the printed circuit board or other elements of the circuit. A package substrate may also include a set of pads to 04aeff104c
