I mean, it's only been a week, but what's the point in moving to seven points per game when only eight teams would really have a need to do so? (12-0 start, a whole new league, a blank slate. Just in a theoretical world, where you think a startup team should start at zero and build slowly until they are a Super Bowl contender. Hmmmm.) Still, I can see the logic: Max points for wins, seven for losses, both for ties. It's very similar to the NBA - - when you go on a long winning streak, you are rewarded for that winning streak. Paying maximum points for a tie sounds like a good idea. If you have a seven point win streak, why go for a 20 point victory? It's more points for you, but it's only a slight reward for
