Heroic tales of those who've gone before, told by the survivors. Every day, heroes struggle against the endless monsters that inhabit Talia, and every day, they fall. Every day. In order to save Talia, Arcadia must save the people who've already fallen. This is a tale of those who've fallen, told by the survivors. You're a peaceful, regular guy who has lived a very quiet life. Until your city gets overrun by monsters who are born of a mysterious contagion and they... breed, and... breed, and your city is overrun. And you're trapped in it. It's up to you to fight against the monsters, survive the plague, and maybe - just maybe - your fate will be different than those of the people you've lost. I think it is a great combination of fighting and RPG elements. The tone is something you have to experience for yourself to feel, that is true to the writing style. Having read the story, I just have a couple of general thoughts: 1. It was a really good book, I enjoyed it a lot and you've probably already got much of it in your head, but I will admit it was a little slow at the beginning. There are many worlds that are just being introduced, and while the pace might be a little slow, it doesn't take too long for the game to set up, and you become able to make a connection with the characters. 2. The story was very well written and told, and it was very descriptive and realistic in portraying the city, it made me feel like I was actually there. 3. The art and sound were awesome, in a book format. One thing that I found very peculiar about the art though, and I think it is very minor, is that on the title page it is your character and your stats, but on the back it is 1v1 combat and battles that are almost coming to an end. I think the 2 genres don't match, I understand it being on the cover, but that puts even more emphasis on the title page, so I would suggest to change the layout of the book a little, just a little. It doesn't take away from the book though, the art is fantastic, and I love it. 4. I really liked the lore and world building,
