A: Dfiii: The easiest way is to run a key logger on the PC, which will store the password in a file somewhere on the machine and run the software it's telling you is your password. I wouldn't run it on a computer just sitting in a public space. Les kirchners Les kirchners was a New York City band, playing ethnic music, that formed in September 1968. The line-up was vocalist Christian Ruiz, bassist Big Black, and drummer Eric Blasberg. They performed at such venues as the Fillmore East and Cafe Wha?, and released three albums before disbanding. They were described by David Malcolm in his All Music Guide to Electric Guitar as "a band of sophisticated transients, who turned some interesting and innovative combinations of folk and rock", but The Rolling Stone review said their blues roots made them "a dirty little bunch of conjurers". Big Black left the band in 1970 to continue working on his solo album, and French guitarist and singer Daniel Gélin was added to replace him. They played a number of gigs with The Electric Flag. In 1970 they supported The Hampton Grease Band at the Bottom Line Club in Greenwich Village. In the US and UK their first album was released in 1971 on Combat Records. Recorded in 1969, All of a Sudden One Morning (EFA), included contributions from Romano Puppin (arranger and orchestrator), from Nicky Hopkins (guitar), and members of the band Grand Prix, including keyboardist Robin Kenrick, guitarist Doug McCall, and bassist Eric Hammel. They were supported by a band called Still Mortimer. The second album, Les kirchners, was released in 1972 and had a similar personnel, with The Hampton Grease Band providing a session. It was produced by Bill Graham. It included cover versions of blues songs (including a French version of "I've Got My Mojo Workin'", a cover of "Mannish Boy" and an English version of "Leaving of Liverpool Bay"), a jazz piece, "R.E.S.P.E.C.T." and a solo guitar piece, "The Night/The Cat". Les kirchners followed up with a 1974 single, "Le jazz". References Category:Musical groups from New York (state)Maple Syrup
