The main short-term objectives of this project are: (1) To establish the feasibility of constructing imaging instruments that can detect epileptiform activity in human cortex. The instruments will consist of arrays of imaged fiber optic elements that can be extended to recording sites, a sampling grid over the human scalp where electrodes can be positioned and a means of extracting data and recording them. A particular array design will be investigated that can be used to simultaneously sense the activity of more than 40 channels of cortex and a sampling grid as little as 0.5 cm by 0.5 cm, allowing for the monitoring of spatial change at the scalp. (2) To study the connectivity of scalp recorded signals. More than 300 channels of scalp recorded electric activity have already been recorded in one epileptic patient. These signals are almost invariably co-registered with the EEG and appear on the scalp as a common-mode signal that significantly modulates the signal of the recording electrodes. The connectivity of these signals is a problem to be studied, but the methods for such studies are not clear. (3) To study the relationship between scalp recorded signals, single electrode local field potentials and the epileptic discharge in the electroencephalogram. The course of the epileptic discharge that is sampled at the scalp will be correlated with local field potentials recorded from the scalp. It is believed that the coherence of the discharge with the local field potential can provide a time-frequency view of the nature of the data that is recorded at the electrode itself and at the scalp. The information obtained in this way may be important for understanding the nature of the discharge. (4) To study the relationship between scalp and EEG discharges. The data obtained in the first three studies will be used to estimate the nature of the scalp discharge from the EEG. The coupling between the EEG and the scalp discharge should then be studied using simultaneous EEG and scalp discharges in order to determine whether the initially unqualified plan into a plan maintained under § 1321, id. at 810. In a more recent case, Sutton v. Weirton Steel Division of National Steel Corp., 567 F.Supp. 1184 (W.D.Pa.1983), the court held that a plan remained as an "unfunded, unamortized" plan even though the plan satisfied all the requirements of § 1321. In reaching this result, the court discussed the interpretive history of the regulations and found "that the Commission's regulations had been intended to prevent early collection of benefits from non-vested participants in an employer's pension plan." Id. at 1189. In the present case, plaintiffs have brought a claim for benefits under the VRU Plan and the Cease and Desist Order but have not demonstrated that the VRU Plan was amended by the cessation of contributions. Thus, there is no triggering event under § 1321 which would result in a re-creation of the plan. In addition, the Board of Directors of Teachers Insurance and Annuity Ass'n found that there was no VRU Plan.
