On the verge of declaring war on the United States, Britain rules the waves with an iron fist. Any aggression made by the colonies could lead to war. Rules of Engagement: Both sides control strategic areas and units. Units can move across borders, where they come under the control of the enemy. There is a river border between the American and British colonies, and troops may cross it. Both sides can support troops on the other side with artillery fire, which is accurate over short distances. Units can be captured, destroyed or blocked by a fortified position. Strategic and tactical units differ in firepower and movement speed, but both can be used tactically. There are two scenarios for each mission. Each side can only have a maximum of two units on a particular mission. There are a maximum of 4 missions on the tutorial campaign. All missions can be played against each other, with the same side against all of them. Each mission has a time limit of 4 days, with a limit of 2 turns per day. Both sides gain experience points for each mission. A unit's experience level will affect the tactics available to them. Each mission has different objectives. Units carry a combined experience level. The higher the unit's experience level, the more bonuses it has. Playing as America You are in command of America's army, the North West Squadron. It's your job to crush your enemies and save your homeland from danger and oppression. Your colonial army is your only chance to liberate your friends and fight for your country. DLC Are you ready for more HYPE!? On the next podcast we're going to be talking about... E.X. Troopers: The Alien Shooter Ahh! You get it from me. Come find me over at... Join the discussion on... Would you rather play the Xbox 360 or PS3 version of a game? [Note: It's not always a good idea to answer in the comments below. Please answer this on the forum] Thank you everyone who joined my #pivotnation! It's nearly a year old now, but I decided to resurrect it to keep it going, so thank you for joining. I'll try to do twice a month! This week's PivotNation centers around our favorite weapon pack. Normally these are collections of characters and weapon mods that are DLC, but for this episode we're talking about a pack that in many respects, is Microtransactions. Megadimension Neptunia VII: The Set's Trial Weapon Pack is exactly that -- a paid DLC pack that adds four characters, six weapon mods, and a suitable number of quests, plus a few extra medals to a game that already has a suite of improvements for multiple platforms. But this is not an all-out buy like some of the Mega DLC expansions that charge you a season pass's worth of money for a single game. Megadimension Neptunia VII: The Set's Trial Weapon Pack is a sequel to Megadimension Neptunia VII: Judgment, and features versions of Nepgear, Neptune, Vert, Uni, and Noire in both their jewel version for the system having it available, and in their default forms. It also does a decent job of implementing each character's game-changing gear, and adds in a handful of fairly strong new endings too. It's also worth mentioning that there is free content. As mentioned before, before the release of the DLC, there's a short cutscene with every character explaining how they used their Trial Weapons to save Vert from Nightmare. This includes Neptune, and her perverted take on high-heeled boots. Finally, when you purchase the DLC, you'll get a Holiday-themed weapon bundle that includes a pack of quests where you play as each character and get exclusive challenges to grant them something special. On the game front, we have Volfogg, Neat-o-Matic, Potions, and Sylph. With these characters and weapon mods, we have our
