From the Case Studies page, search for the report including Case 6. The case involved a 16-year-old male with Lhermitte's syndrome that was in a mild state of responsiveness. His primary neurological symptoms were motor symptoms. His motor disorder had mildly affected his ability to drive a vehicle. He had an on-going headache and this was partly controlled with medication. This patient had been re-programmed with a current of 1 mA with a pulse width of 50 microseconds. An acceptable mood was generated. He was aware of low-level background sensations. He experienced no symptoms of paresthesia. He had no adverse physical reactions including muscle twitches. Monitoring sites that should be considered are: Appearance and behavior- Focus, attentive, adequate; Sensory- Hearing, touch, taste, smell, and vision; Motor- Coordination, response to light (visual acuity testing); Psychological- Thinking ability; Cognitive- Language, arithmetic skills; Emotional/behavioral- Agitation, depression; Autonomic- Blood pressure; Cranial- Head injury, immediate surgery is not recommended on these patients until several days after their injury. Delayed hematomas may be discovered when a patient's neurological exam worsens or when their ICP increases. On other occasions, a routine follow-up CT scan to determine whether a small lesion has changed in size indicates that the hematoma or contusion has enlarged significantly. In these cases, the safest approach is to remove the lesion before it enlarges and causes neurological damage.
