Firmware A501CG/T00JQ: Advice on using SQLite for my first app I'm developing my first app and need to store some settings with my app and i've decided i want to use SQLite as i have seen it works well within apps. I know there are a few questions about sqLite on here, but this is slightly different i'd like advice on what would be the best way to create/save data within a SQLite db? I'm now creating a login system where if a user logs on they are created/updated with an ID and a password but i'd like to store these settings within a SQLite db so the user can check there login/settings whenever they open the app. Thanks A: As an opinion, I would say that instead of using SQLite, I would suggest you to consider making your app more a Accessibility Manager (it stores with a content provider), that is it would not only store some data, but would also allow the user to manage all his data and permissions. You can find quite a lot of tutorials about that in Google or here on SO, you can find some more links on the Android developer's site. Another thing to be noted is that you have a limit in your.sqlite db of 4GB. Since the full DB size could be around 10-20MB, you need to consider the limits when creating your database, since SQLite is not the greatest thing around. Another suggestion is that you should create a local copy of the DB, and only save the necessary information on this copy.
