Tobacco-related expenditures are substantial for the Austrian health care system. While first attempts were made to reach a long-term goal of stopping the tobacco epidemic, there is still evidence of insufficient progress. Whether there is evidence of a relationship between smoking-cessation interventions and medical-services utilization in smoking cessation programs is still under debate. The aim of the study was to examine the relationship between smoking-cessation interventions and medical-services utilization in smoking cessation programs in Austrian health care. Using analyses of national representative data from the health care claim data of the statutory health insurance funds in Austria, the authors analyzed the relationship between smoking-cessation interventions and medical services utilization. The data used included outpatient care, inpatient services, and prescription
