page introduced appendicitis boy and page and plant traded lead lines on chantilly lace as an encore and we were off. Iz had already lit the joint. the audience had taken to the band and the casino owner was worried about the counter being passed. just before the end, when page's thumping organ set the mood for keiths horn solo, jeff pinkus, the casino owner, leant down from the speakers "they are warming up" i could see page looking round and smirking. thats the closest we are going to get he said, smiling, and we went down the fastest ever. next stop Iz, where three songs were played, two from their debut album, the blues child in time and the jewish mourning song maccabea, and the soulfully swinging brown girl. the middle song was whizzo who offered a little respite, followed by a medley from the recent Iz album, im lookin, which included faces, crying time, i wanna be your lover, i love you, and what have you done to my face, which caused the american contingent among the audience to smile and clap their hands in approval. jimmy page was trying to ape jeff, but it wasnt going well. he had to stop, clap his hands and shout "clap the hands, clap the hands" to get them off their feet. it worked. a few more songs followed and then it was time for the encore. another two were played, the judas priest ballad painkiller, and the guitar driven you got the stuff. the heat was getting to everybody. the casino owner was on the phone to his bookies. "four to one says they come back every time. this time theyre not coming, and i want to shut down the show." after the encore, the band went straight into my way which gave mal, who seemed to be enjoying himself, a chance to be obnoxious. he moved to the drums, a move that proved to be very useful as he was able to keep up with jimmy page. once on the drum skins though, it was a bit of a struggle for him and he had to sit down for a while. not such a bad thing, he managed to get the band back into business, and in the meantime, he was taking the piss out of the crowd, and the casino owner in particular. this he did in various ways throughout the show, including pretending to strangle paole, a teenage girl who had jumped on stage before the show began. he had actually been told to stay backstage, but she always used to follow jimmy when he came off stage. and it seems that one of the stage hands was fond of her. so she ended up on stage, and the stage hand was not amused. page called over the girl, and asked her to get off stage. "i dont like him" she whined. "i know you dont" laughed page. "who is he? he's just a guy" screamed the girl. "i dont like him, dont like him," she shouted. "you better go back to your seat then," said jimmy. "he's gay or something" the girl added. "he's just a guy." "go back to your seat, its dangerous out here." "i dont want to go, i want to stay with you," said the girl. page reluctantly relented, and mal started beating the drum again.
