Mammalian B lymphocytes express a family of nuclease genes, which are activated after receptor-mediated stimulation of germinal centers. B lymphocytes play an essential role in the initiation of an immune response against antigens (Ag). In this study we examined the expression of nucleases in B lymphocytes. Using three lines of in vitro-cultured B lymphocytes, human tonsil B cells, and a human B-cell hybridoma, we cloned two genes, apolipoprotein B mRNA-editing enzyme catalytic polypeptide-like 3 (APOBEC3), and the 16th member of the apolipoprotein B mRNA-editing enzyme catalytic polypeptide family. Both genes were expressed in immature B cells and germinal center B cells, but not in plasma cells or memory cells. Apobec3 and Apobec3D were activated after B-cell receptor (BCR) stimulation. BCR cross-linking induced Apobec3 expression not only at the mRNA level but also at the protein level in B cells. Furthermore, Apobec3 expression was augmented by cross-linking of the Fc receptor on B cells. These results suggest that Apobec3 expression and its activity may have an important role in antigen receptor-mediated B-cell activation and germinal center reactions. Knockdown of hsp27 sensitizes PC-3 human prostate cancer cells to heat stress-induced cell death via the eIF2 $\alpha$ - and ASK1/JNK/p38MAPK-dependent apoptotic pathway. As a molecular chaperone, heat shock protein 27 (hsp27) is involved in the heat stress-induced apoptotic pathway. However, the role of hsp27 in apoptosis has not been clarified in cancer cells. In this study, we investigated the role of hsp27 in heat-induced apoptosis in PC-3 human prostate cancer cells. Upon treatment with heat stress (45 degrees C, 30 min), the expression levels of hsp27 increased in a dose-dependent manner. Hsp27 knockdown by small interfering RNA (siRNA) increased the apoptotic response of heat-treated cells. The apoptosis following hsp27 siRNA treatment was associated with the activation of caspase-3, caspase-8, and caspase-9. Furthermore, apoptosis following heat treatment occurred via the extrinsic death receptor pathway, s verdict was guilty of murdering a child, we will sustain the judgment of conviction on that count. [Bryant, supra, 553 U.S. at p. 662.] We do not perceive a significant difference between punishing an infant killer for life by depriving him of the chance to take a life in the future (in the Bryant case, the chance to be a parent) and punishing him by depriving him of the chance to live a life in a prison (like the sentence imposed in this case) deprived of any possibility of a future. While defendant in this case was not a parent, he was by all accounts a loving and caring father who took responsibility for the family by his own participation in raising Taveiria's three older siblings (all of whom are now adults). We do not find that the failure to apply the Miller factors has any bearing on the cruel and unusual punishment issue in the case. F The sentence to life imprisonment with the possibility of parole after 25 years is not disproportionate to the offense Petitioner is currently 32 years of age. While his life expectancy is approximately 66 years, he will be eligible for release on parole approximately 28 years after he is sentenced. (See People v. Perez (2019) 40 Cal.App.5th 948, 961.) A life sentence without the possibility of parole after 25 years is not disproportionate to the crime. \* REFERENCES IN THIS DECISION As stated at the beginning, the pertinent facts in this case are derived from the facts in the California Supreme Court opinion reversing the conviction for first degree murder: "Taveiria R. [was] born in January 2004 [and] lived with her mother, defendant [R.S.], and defendant's stepfather, James S., along with James's four children[, and defendant's, R.S.'s and the children's mother]. On January 29, 2012, defendant shot Taveiria in the face and stomach, killing her. [H] The prosecution theorized that defendant was angry at Taveiria for teasing James's two-year-old son and telling James that the infant was not her baby. On March 8, 2012, defendant told investigators that he shot Taveiria in the face and stomach because she had 'dicked' James and that Taveiria had shot herself in
