Jennifer Lopez talks singer Katy Perry, Adam Levine, her Mamas & Papas and more By NBC NEWS Posted: 04/06/2014 09:49:53 AM MDT Updated: 04/06/2014 09:51:33 AM MDT Jennifer Lopez and singer Katy Perry pose during the 2014 Golden Globe Awards held at the Beverly Hilton Hotel on Sunday in Beverly Hills, California. (Armando Franca / Associated Press) NEW YORK — When Jennifer Lopez and Katy Perry were introduced onstage at the 2014 Golden Globes at the Beverly Hilton Hotel in Beverly Hills, it was a moment many had been waiting to see since 2013. The two singers were in town for the Golden Globes, where their movie "Machete Kills" was nominated for a Golden Globe Award for best musical or comedy. They also posed for photos and chatted with each other. "I love you," Lopez said to Perry, offering the singer a hug. "If we could do a duet, I'd love to sing a song with you," said Perry. Lopez then performed "Live My Life." At the pre-awards ceremony at the Beverly Hilton Hotel, Lopez first told a packed crowd that it was a "great honor" to be in Los Angeles, then she showed up the Golden Globes red carpet with Gucci pumps and sheer white pants — and no socks. She said she was barefoot in the house. "Tonight is really a beautiful night — we are very honored to be in the house — I've been told you already know, but thank you!" she said. An hour later, Lopez and Steven Tyler were introduced at the Golden Globes. Lopez, 45, looked glamorous in a black dress and waved to the crowd from the stage. She was joined by two men — her husband of nine years, Casper Smart, and her guitarist, a man named Lucky Santana. Lopez — who has four children with Smart — has been married for nearly three years. Advertisement Lopez said she knows "that everyone is looking at me, and I know I look good — so let's have some fun!" She then performed "Jenny From the Block" from her 2006 movie "Soul Men" and her 2002 hit song "If You Had My Love." Near the end of her performance, Lopez dedicated the song to Perry, who sang the

The global economic slowdown may not be over yet, as worries persist about a financial sector still weighed down by bad debts, a slowdown in developed markets in Europe, and higher rates of recession in emerging markets. The European Central Bank is seen by analysts as unlikely to be able to purchase more of the government bonds that have underpinned their exchange rate system after this week's meeting, which many had expected to mark the closure of an era of the single currency's history. Speaking on Tuesday, José Manuel Barroso, president of the European Commission, which led negotiations on the new monetary union, raised the risk of a financial and banking collapse in Europe, saying that a fiscal consolidation and a return to international competitiveness "will be essential" in the eurozone. The commission's chief said that the taper tantrum of recent weeks, where banks selling dollars and euros short last week to profit from the spiralling dollar, had left it without the main instruments to combat the euro's decline. Angela Merkel, the German chancellor, said on Wednesday that "it's too early to be considering" whether the euro will stop being the primary currency of the single currency zone. Greece's finance minister, Euclid Tsakalotos, said on Wednesday that a new loan programme would be needed to restore the Greek debt burden ratio to 120% of the economy by 2020. The new debt would be repaid in local drachmas and would contribute to boosting growth. In a report to EU ministers in Brussels on Tuesday, the new European commissioner for economic and monetary affairs, Olli Rehn, said that recent market developments had shown that "confidence and trust in the current economic and monetary framework is being tested" and that more flexible frameworks for an increased role of the European Central Bank in crisis management were needed. The ECB stood ready to do more if its interest rates were not sufficient to stimulate growth. But an exit from the bond-buying program was not in its mandate. The ECB has bought €489bn worth of bonds in the past four years. The US Federal Reserve announced on Wednesday that its large-scale bond buying has ended, with the $4.5bn a month programme likely to be wound down this summer. Most economists believed that by November, the Fed would be in a position to leave its support to the rest of the global economy.// Licensed to
