Ten cadavers were studied by anatomical dissection. The interscapular nerve was injected with a mixture of India ink and polyamide-82 to detect the distribution of the interscapular nerve and its branches. In the 10 cases, the nerve trunk was present in most of them, and the course and branching of the nerve varied in different cases. In case 1, the course of the nerve was directly from the anterior branch of the second cervical nerve, and the branch joined the ventral rami, divided into the suprascapular and supraclavicular nerves. In case 3, the course of the nerve was from the occipital plexus to the ventral part of the lumbar plexus, with a bifurcation at the lower border of the thoracic cavity; the branch entered the supraclavicular nerve.
