U.N.MISS spokesman, Shabia Mantoo, told the press at the UN headquarters in New York on Monday, September 8, 2014, that government troops had recently captured the city of Bor, previously controlled by rebels, as they continue fighting for the key port, which the government hopes will give it access to the world's largest oil reserve, potentially worth billions of dollars. Government spokesman Michael Makuei accused the rebels of hiding weapons and ammunition. "They have brought in about 100,000 people from Bor and other areas outside Juba. We are still waiting for proof that they have armed themselves," he said, adding: "When they seized Bor they used those people as human shields." Heavy fighting continues in Bor, according to a local reporter. Mantoo said that the U.N.MISS has been informed by UNICEF that on September 4, 2014, government troops carried out an attack on the town of Bor, killing and maiming civilians, including women and children. In one attack, he said, government troops burned to death an 18-year-old boy as he sought medical treatment for his serious injuries. "We are very worried about the situation in Bor and many other locations outside of Juba, including Malakal and Bor. We have not yet received reports about the safety and security of schools and hospitals in these areas," he said. The U.N.MISS has urged the government to c9d1549cdd for the Red River and the Blonde Lady [ComicBookMovie]So, while it's still the new year, let's pause for a minute and look at the original soundtrack for the Blu-ray and DVD release of The Red River and the Blonde Lady, both from Austin Studios. Almost all of these tracks were originally written for the film's sound track, rather than for use at any other time. With the film now in stores, it seems appropriate to take a moment to reflect on the overall score and its execution with John Hubley's art direction. As they say, but for the efficiency of conditions under which it was written, the songs would have left the film rather than enhanced the narrative. A few caveats before you jump into the scans. First, this is not a comprehensive score listing since I have not heard this score (only the trailer and soundtrack album) so I cannot say for sure what, if any, elements were included in it. Second, because the music was written specifically for the film, I say it doesn't get a bonus track. I suspect that there are more of these omissions than are here. For example, "Another World" by Art Garfunkel and Roys Borenstein was used a lot during the film. I suspect the board of Austin Studios made this decision and I would love it if that's what the studio did. But the truth is, I doubt that their choice was ordered by anyone. So I think something is missing from this list. The music in this indie film doesn't have the space and breath to sing on the forefront of the action; they are always just at the right place and right time and they usually blend in with the dialogue. (Ed Harris, in the clip below, does it about as well as Jack Palance singing a yacht song in Titanic: A Jazz Piano Version.) Austin Studios made a process video that covers some of the animation notes on the film. I didn't use that here. Instead, I used a mix of some animation clips from the film and some art from the film. When I found myself thinking about the music, I used action to illustrate the ideas. I also made some drawings from the original script and the photographic stills in the Blu-ray's trailer (two and a half minutes of new animation on top of a newly ordered cover) and pictures
