From the developers: Slickscreen is the first and only customizable browser based on webkit. Slickscreen is built on the latest Linux technologies for performance and user friendly interface. It allows the user to surf, email, chat and manage all his or her popular network protocols from the same unified interface. Slickscreen in a unique feature to browse and manage multiple pages simultaneously with multiple windows. Multiple panels can be added and collapsed using Drag and Drop functionality. If you are a power user and a command line junkie, this is your browser. You can follow me at @irrelevantthax over on twitter for daily updates! Check out my new Windows 8 themes page here for the individual versions or here for a list of my favorites. I found a great Free WordPress theme at Template Monster, called Breathe. Check it out: This is a very simple and clean theme that I think will suit any blogger or creative person. If you have trouble installing, there is a video tutorial at the bottom of the page here. I also found a couple of great new sites to check out, and have added them to the links on the main page. I also have a new Music Listing page, which you can access from the main menu bar or from this page. All the music on my computer is listed here with covers/photos, full album art, details, tags, and comments. There are a few more site updates to come as well, so stay tuned for that. In the meantime, why not checkout some of the great new Windows themes out there? I really dig this one because of the lack of ads, which in my book is a major positive. I am not a big fan of the white on black type scheme, but if you can use it for one site, you can use it for many. This one is pretty slick and seems to work with all types of devices. I really dig the layout, and it has a really nice and easy interface. It is one of those themes where the only thing I can ever complain about, is that it is a little too clean. But, I can handle that. The pop up games can be disabled in the options, so if you don't like them, you can turn that off. The first couple of links there
