Different methods of preparing xanthan gum typically utilize one or more steps which in the nature of the preparation require the use of very elaborate and elaborate equipment. In the known technology it is possible to separate solutions of different densities, since, according to the definition of density, density is equal to the weight of one volume of a substance divided by the volume of the substance. The material of reduced density is dispersed in a liquid of higher density. As a result of this dispersion, the material of reduced density forms a substance which is either floating on the liquid or in suspension in the liquid. U.S. Pat. No
