Your request is private and confidential. Have you downloaded the for iPhone 3G 2G phone rete card APN settings using the computer iTunes App? For instance, if the ip address of your computer is 192.168.1.1 the APN name would look like 192.168.1.1, if you are using cable modem or DSL set the APN name to either the number you have been assigned by your internet service or to the dns name of your isp. Your iPhone serial number for example, the serial number for the iPhone 3G is: A123456789012. The serial number for the iPhone 3Gs second generation is: ABCDEFG123456789. Improving your iPhone security from @connectix . How easy is it to jailbreak iOS This is one of the most common questions and the easiest is to use the tools at iphoneid.com . It can be jailbroken in 30 minutes. You download a tool (Cydia Impactor), iPhone Jailbreak (Cydia Impactor), and computer for Mac and Windows by Connectix, and then restore your iPhone with iTunes. If you're going to switch to an Android, it's best to have an iPhone but you can use that iPhone for the time being until you switch over. Don't delete the iPhone or the password data from iTunes, it can be restored or it can recover. If you're not going to switch to Android, you can get a cheap iPhone and do a clean install of iOS 8.2 on that. You need to upgrade the firmware (download and install iOS 8.2, skip iOS 8.3) and then restore your iPhone with iTunes, or you can use iTunes to disable the lock screen . If you're worried about the data being accessible, just use iTunes to restore your iPhone but make sure to mark all your data as Spam to not have it accidentally deleted (although this will delete photos and videos as well). If you switch to Android, that makes sense to buy a brand new cheap phone that you plan to keep, but that's a different discussion.

A recent session at the IP Bar Association Annual IP Litigation Workshop presented by Renee Bredeweg of Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP demonstrated for us what is possible within the US legal system when it comes to preparing an application. The prosecutor of record needs to be able to work with the inventor and the patent team to devise a strategy for launching the application. Once the application is launched and granted, it takes considerable time for the underlying prior art to be exhausted. In fact, this is the very reason that each country may have an own patent office, who can look into these documents. The patent also introduces for the first time the concept of prosecuting an invention through a process which involves patent drawings and other documentation. In practice, international patent offices will be exchanging documents in each step of the process, as well as examining old patent applications, given the goal to make it easier to patent in other countries. Patent applications cannot be filed until after the date in the six-month grace period, i.e. a one-year grace period is provided after the filing date shown in the original application to allow late-arriving information to be added. Further, the application has to be filed by another specified deadline, and the original filing date is counted as a filing date. Open Application (OA) System: All patent applications are also assigned a status code, a number. Frequently, the status code has no practical effect, although special "late" status codes may be set in some circumstances. Each application is assigned an Application Reference Number (ARN). Each filing date is assigned a Status Date. Status Codes Generally include Approved status, Expires status, Not approved status, Draft status, Disclosure status, Abbreviated status, Abandoned status, Expired status. An abandoned patent application is not valid, not enforceable and does not restrict other persons from developing and marketing new and useful inventions. Status is explained in section 15. An expired patent application is not valid, not enforceable and has no other legal or filing significance. A publication of the application before or after the filing date counts as an effective filing date. When a publication is listed as a publication after the filing date, this publication is cited as the last filed publication, and the priority-specifying paragraphs in the published application are to be considered to be given in the priority. The filing date of a published application cannot be used to qualify an application filing date of an application filed before the publication. The invention is considered to be covered by the patent document(s) published. See Publication, below. Publication When a patent application is published as such (mentioned in a publication), the filing date and filing status date of the publication must be used as the effective filing date and filing status date of the patent application. This disclosure as the effective filing date and filing status date in the patent. The filing date and filing status date of a published patent application is an effective filing date and filing status date for the same invention. The specification, drawings and claims of the published patent application must comply with the filing date, filing status and content of the publication. The earliest priority date must be selected. The primary patent publication may be delayed by filing a continuation, divisional, or continuation-in-part application. 5ec8ef588b
