You can use Photoshop CC for commercial or professional works. However, recent versions require Adobe Creative Cloud (see the next section for more on the Creative Cloud) subscription, which is an additional cost. Photoshop's beginner-friendly support helps to minimize the learning curve and enables users to create images with ease. Lightroom Lightroom is primarily a professional tool that edits images. It offers the most depth of editing features in one program. Lightroom has a larger beginner-friendly support base than Photoshop and photo editing extensions such as Adobe Photoshop Elements. Most Lightroom features, as well as adjustments made to images, are done in the Develop module. It also offers the ability to print and share images. One of Lightroom's significant advantages is its support for most of Apple's iPhoto features, such as the digital camera and iPad capabilities, editing, displaying, and printing. This makes Lightroom a more comprehensive package. Starting to Meet Lightroom The best way to get started with Lightroom is to purchase a copy and start working with it. However, you can also open it if you have the license. The next sections discuss what the two programs do and do not have in common. Lightroom vs. Photoshop Both Lightroom and Photoshop offer features that are similar. For example, they both can merge similar frames in one photo, use layers to work with multiple images on a single layer, and color correct images. The differences center on how you use them. You can use either program for the following tasks: Merging similar images Editing images Playing with selections Creating special effects Offering caption support However, Photoshop's support for layers, masks, drawing, and most of its other features is far superior than Lightroom's. Similarly, many people use Lightroom for advanced work and Photoshop for beginners. It really does come down to how you want to approach the programs and what you have an interest in doing. If you want to develop advanced skills in Photoshop, that is the program for you. If you want to get the job done quickly and get on with your work, Lightroom is perfect. Creating a Name for Your Work We recommend that you have a naming convention for your work. For example, you can use your last name and the first letter of the first name. Or if you have a company name, simply use the first letter of that company's name

“professional”, but then you will start to use it so much it won’t be a big deal. Start by opening your image in Photoshop Elements. From the menu bar on the left side of the screen, you’ll see that there is an eye dropper tool. This tool can be used to take the color and value of an image and place it on another image. You can take the color of one of the edges, the sky, the sea, or a color of grass and transfer it to a different image and use that new image to create something different. You can also import an image and use the eye dropper tool to place it where it needs to be in the new image. For example, if you have an image of grass, you can use 05a79cecff

Nematicidal effects of phytophenols against root-knot nematodes in tomato and soybean. In this study, we measured the phytophenol concentrations in 20 well known food-based beverages and evaluated their nematicidal effects against soybean cyst nematode and root-knot nematode (RKN) in tomato. The phytophenol content of the tested beverages showed wide variation. Principal component analysis (PCA) showed that the phytophenol content was closely associated with the mushroom mushroom fruit, mandarin and mulberry juices. The phytophenols had nematicidal activity against both soybean cyst nematode and RKN in tomato. The phytophenol concentrations in the nematicidal activity were measured by high-performance liquid chromatography (HPLC). At concentrations of 200 mg/L, oenin and phloretin were found to have greater nematicidal activity against soybean cyst nematode than cyanidin, with LC50 values of 8.4 and 17.0 mg/L, respectively. Phloretin and nematicidal G protein-Coupled Receptor Kinase GPR40 agonists, on the other hand, reduced the population of RKN effectively at 200 mg/L, with LC50 values of 9.5 mg/L for phloretin and 18.7 mg/L for nematicidal G protein-Coupled Receptor Kinase GPR40 agonists. These results suggest that the phytophenols in the tested beverages show potential to control soybean cyst nematode and RKN in the environment.

Design and evaluation of a new system for pre-hospital integrated emergency cardiac care. The aim of this study was to design and evaluate a new system for emergency transport of patients with acute myocardial infarction (AMI). The system comprised a mobile intensive care unit (MICU) with oxygen supply, a defibrillator, an algorithm for primary pre-hospital treatment of AMI, and a device for recording data and storing them on a PC. Two emergency ambulances with the MICU were tested in a rural area. The MICU transport team consisted of one anaesthesiologist, one intern and one student. One crew operated the MICU, with all crew members wearing personal protective equipment. An independently operating emergency defibrillator and a portable PC with software were used. Field personnel took patients immediately to the MICU, where they were examined, electrocardiography (ECG) monitored and treated with an algorithm. In the case of a shockable rhythm, immediate defibrillation by the crew or crew members was performed. If no shockable rhythm was found, a 15-sec algorithm using cardiac monitoring, activated ECG and body temperature was applied. The ambulance times were noted. Of 55 patients with AMI, 63% (n = 35) were found to have a shockable rhythm. Of these, 37 (54%) were shocked. The mean MICU transport time was 45+/-13 min and the mean time from emergency call to defibrillation was 25+/-13 min. Two out of 22 patients (9%) with ST-segment elevation myocardial infarction (STEMI) were not pre-hospital treated; no malignant arrhythmia occurred. The system was easy to use and applied the treatment recommended by guidelines. It provided similar safety for patients as an EMS system using a conventional medical crew with a dedicated emergency defibrillator. The system can be recommended for routine use in conjunction with an EMS system.

Q: Error in scoping using gsub and sprintf I am trying to replace some columns with a new name, e.g. in column "A" I want to have "D1", while all the cells should keep their original format. The code I use was: `df_2 % mutate_all(funs(gsub(reg_col, new_col_name,)))` but instead of what I wanted, it returns this error: Error
