Ask HN: Are you hiring any lawyers? - dmj724 I've just graduated college and am getting started in the industry. After a grueling process of picking a major, my first job search, and the working on my first real side project I find myself in a great position. I'm looking for a part-time job that I can maybe work full-time one day, but I really want to get a foot in the door first (because although I'm good enough, it's really easy to get to the top in this industry in the absence of pre-existing contacts). My problem is finding a job to take advantage of what I've learned in school, and the things I learned on my own projects. I can't code, so I don't have any experiences outside of school, and I've read that the law (one of the few industries that actually has careers after college) is a HUGE bottleneck. So I'm wondering, are you hiring any lawyers? I am willing to go either in-state or out-of-state.
