Millennial Credit Scores Are Below Those of Older Americans Written by: Bill Hardekopf 02/14/13 - 9:32 AM EDT NEW YORK (Tribune News Service) — It's time for the proverbial "Ah ha" moment for older generations: Rather than simply staying away from debt, the next step may be to remove all of it. Although millennials have less traditional debt than their parents' generation, credit scores have slipped for Americans in general — with millennials at the bottom of the list. The credit score closely tracks a consumer's credit risk and is designed to predict how likely a person is to repay a financial obligation. The higher the number, the higher the chance a debtor will default on a debt. The lower the number, the lower the risk. The key difference between millennials and older people is that millennials carry higher debt loads, and they've had a hard time paying it off. Millennials have been "the most credit challenged generation since the Great Depression," says Christine Ramkumar, the founder of LoanMart, an online marketplace that helps consumers borrow money. "This generation, young people, are graduating with student loan debt in the range of $20,000 — and it's not uncommon for somebody to get a $30,000 or $40,000 loan." While the younger generation accounts for about a quarter of all debt, it has had the most difficulty paying it off, according to the Federal Reserve. Roughly half of students who graduated in 2008 had student loan debt, and only 26% graduated with no student debt. The figure was 31% in 2004, according to Fed figures. Among those who graduated with student debt, the average amount was $24,250 in 2008 and $19,350 in 2004. Roughly 33% of high school graduates and 46% of college grads report no credit card debt, according to a recent survey by Discover Financial Services, a credit card issuer. Credit cards were introduced during the

Silhouette Mint Studio Crack Product Key For Windows

The Silhouette Mint Studio is an application that helps you to create stamps from almost anything you can imagine. Simply drag and drop a photo or design from your computer's hard drive onto a panel in the application. The images you drop will serve as a base for your stamp, and you can add any text you like to the stamp. Using only the toolbox available on the panel, you can add colors, shading, shadows, and any other design elements you like to your stamp. The application lets you save stamps you create with it directly to your library, and you can also share them with your friends on various social networking websites. You can also print stamps as you create them with the optional Silhouette Mint stamp maker.

Statement by the Occupy Indy General Assembly, Saturday, April 27, 2013 On Saturday, April 27, 2013 we will begin with a General Assembly meeting at 2 pm with a chain link fence separating us from the police on the north side of the square. Our intention is for this assembly to be non-violent and peaceful. This is the General Assembly on Occupy Indy's four and a half month anniversary. This was originally scheduled for a year ago today - and we share the blame. Our nation is broken. The world is broken. We've become convinced that the system is broken. What's our solution? I'm not sure. But it looks like we're beginning to try to live differently. We're trying to live together with more empathy for each other, and a better understanding of the whole earth. Living differently means that we're not planning on leaving the square, or going back to sleep, or waiting for the same assholes who broke the system to fix it. We're going to try to get acquainted and learn more about everyone in the square. And we're very grateful for everyone who has joined us in our direct action, passed the general assembly resolutions, sat in the rain last week, and spoken at the general assembly. We love that. We're all here because we know that it's impossible to change the world and grow society with all of us out in the streets complaining. We've learned that we cannot wish our reality away. So we're going to try to see the world with new eyes. To try and live in
