Q: Set correct DateTime.TryParseExact I have two DateTimes, a String, and a Predefined DateTime like: String: "07.07.2014" Predefined: {1/1/0001 12:00:00 AM} My Predefined is a DateTime. The String should be parsed to DateTime if my Predefined is equal to it. If it's not equal, the String should be parsed into System.DateTime.MinValue. I tried to get the DateTime from the string using the DateTime.TryParseExact-Method as following: string date = "07.07.2014"; bool result = DateTime.TryParseExact(date, "dd.MM.yyyy", CultureInfo.InvariantCulture, DateTimeStyles.None, out timeFromDate); if (result) { Console.WriteLine(timeFromDate); } How to get the correct result? A: Have you tried parsing your string using CultureInfo.InvariantCulture? By default, TryParseExact will use the culture specified in the CultureInfo and TryParse will use the current user's culture. According to the MSDN documentation, using InvariantCulture when parsing a date will return MinValue if the specified format is invalid. From that documentation: The culture is invariant, which means that only the DateTime format information is considered. Therefore, if your string is in a different culture than that specified by the invariant culture, it does not throw an exception. Instead, the operation returns MinValue for the DateTime value. To successfully parse a string in another culture, use one of the CultureInfo objects to specify a different format and culture. The news: A Florida hospital took the unusual step of going public with the fact that a doctor who was charged with killing a little girl by giving her an overdose of cough syrup was a registered nurse. Dr. Kermit Gosnell, who ran a West Philadelphia clinic that became a hot spot for illegal late-term abortions in the mid-2000s, was arrested last week after authorities say they found the remains of aborted babies in his West Philadelphia clinic. The coroner listed the cause of death for each of the babies as

Q: Does an Azure website shares its cache with the RDS instance? When an RDS instance is provisioned, does it get a copy of all the objects in the website (i.e. all objects that are configured to be in the website or that are configured to be present in the IIS cache)? If so, what limits the size of the cache? Is there any way to partition the cache to ensure that one RDS instance is only aware of the changes made in that particular part of the website? A: The RDS cache is independent of the S3 cache. So each RDS instance will pull its own cache, with the exception of shared caches, such as the site's session state cache. These cache objects are shared between multiple RDS instances. You could think of the RDS cache as being "in RAM", which is quicker and more cost effective than spinning up disks. SignalR Auto-Discovery: Connecting JavaScript to SignalR - kentf ===== concerto There is still a lack of documentation/tooling for this kind of scenario. How would a 'developer' tell what is the 'SignalR' he/she is really supposed to connect to? Is the adapter discovered by the server automatically? Identity of spirochetes in swine. Our study was to identify spirochetes from tissue specimens of boars with reproductive failure. Bacterial culture and molecular analysis by PCR were used to identify the spirochetes from tissues. From 840 samples from reproductive failure sows, 2271 spirochetes were cultured, and 1294 isolates (56.5%) were identified by electron microscopy. Of the cultured spirochetes, 99.7% were Spirochaeta sp. and 0.3% Treponema sp. The sequence of the 16S ribosomal RNA gene of cultured Spirochaeta sp. was closely related to Spirochaeta porci sp. The second group of cultured spirochetes was identified as Treponema sp
