do the following: Open a command prompt. If you're not sure how to do this, I'll assume you do and show you. It's kind of like a DOS window. Type `cd \windows\system32`. Or wherever you think might be your windows directory. Let's just say it's `C:\windows`. The problem is that if you're not in that directory, we need to figure out where you are. We'll do that in a second. Type `java -version`. This should give you the version of java that your system is running. Type `java -showversion`.

This should show the complete version number. This is the one you should use. If it doesn't, you will need to change the environment variable `JAVA_HOME` to where java is installed. Now, you don't have to do this. You can wait for java to update its version number. But remember, if you have more than one java on your system, it could get confused. I'm assuming that the version that Java updates is the one that your computer came with. So, you want to ensure that it will keep updating until you change the system java. Now, we're going to go to a

Our system used to be an SMPTE-488 feed. It has been replaced by a PSTN-based system that uses a PSTN-Tek DSP 3220. I have two phones going into the voicemail system, one from the original SMPTE feed and one from the PSTN-Tek DSP. The fax goes into the SMPTE feed, and I have been looking for a way to convert the incoming message from SMPTE-488 to the analog-based signal that is output by the DSP. There is no easy way to do this, and I haven't been able to find anyone with the necessary knowledge to explain it. The next best I found was to get a gigabit ethernet IP-to-IP interface, but the price is prohibitive. Does anybody have an idea of how this could be done? I would prefer to avoid using a commercial product, but will consider one if it fits my needs. Minister of Foreign Affairs Sheikh Mohammed bin Abdulrahman Al Thani says that Qatar will continue its support for Egyptian projects on the Red Sea coast and will open a special consulate there for Egyptian citizens in order to facilitate their travel and adopt visas. In an interview with Al Ittihad newspaper on Sunday, Sheikh Mohammed said that Qatar will provide Egypt with a number of services, including increasing the number of medical centers and training centers for healthcare professionals in Egypt, providing Egyptian citizens with scholarships and providing Egyptian merchants with visas for Qatar. "We are discussing how to give scholarships to Egyptian university students studying in Qatar," he said, noting that the discussions are taking place at a low level.
