The role of the body surface area in the perioperative management of children undergoing major cardiac surgery: a systematic review. Despite recent improvements in perioperative management, children undergoing major cardiac surgery (MCS) continue to experience multiple complications. To review studies that investigated the association between body surface area (BSA) and the rate of complications in children undergoing MCS. A systematic search was performed in the databases from January 1994 to December 2012. The databases searched were PubMed, the Cochrane Central Register of Controlled Trials (CENTRAL), EMBASE and CINAHL. Search terms included were 'body surface area' OR 'body size' AND 'cardiac surgery' OR 'cardiopulmonary bypass' OR 'cardiothoracic surgery' OR 'heart-lung machine'. Only English language studies that were published over the last 20 years were included. The primary outcome of interest was the association between BSA and postoperative complications in children undergoing MCS. The secondary outcome of interest was association of BSA with mortality and a comparison of the estimated and measured BSA in children undergoing MCS. The initial search found 3806 articles. A total of nine studies were included. A positive association between BSA and the occurrence of postoperative complications was observed among children undergoing MCS. Postoperative complications were associated with low BSA in children undergoing MCS with and without cardiopulmonary bypass. Postoperative complications increased with increasing BSA in children undergoing MCS. A rare case of hepatic pregnancy. Hepatic pregnancy refers to ectopic implantation of trophoblastic tissue within the liver. The estimated prevalence of this entity is 0.01-0.2% of all ectopic pregnancies. It is more common in women of advanced age and is more likely to occur in the later half of pregnancy. This paper reports a 30-year-old woman who presented with right upper quadrant pain, anorexia and nausea, and was found to have a singleton pregnancy at 12+4 weeks gestation. Imaging studies revealed a large heterogeneous abdominal mass with multiple septations and areas of 04aeff104c
