So you get a lump of lego several inches thick in the middle of your lounge room carpet. There's room for all you guys to spread out and play - with the extent of my room being about 10 feet across. And for some kid, probably about 6 feet high - which I'm guessing would be this weight. No. Nope. Not going to happen. The sheer size of the lego. The number of lego blocks. And the weight/heft of the blocks. There's a real chance it might not make it into the house. The sitting room is carpeted. There's a spare carpet underlay beneath the carpet, but even if this did get through the carpet and up on the carpet underlay, still needs to negotiate the main room. The main room is carpeted and I've stacked a whole heap of furniture - including the console with central control for the TV - up against the wall. I'm hoping that would block it (although this is pre-dry) But
