"All right, this is a local copy of our picture. We're going to open this up in Photoshop. And we're going to start by creating a new document that's 640 pixels wide by 480 pixels tall. And let's simply go in and rename this, and I'm going to call it, "Ginny and Larry," and then I'm going to click Save. And then let's save this into our Program Files folder for the operating system. Now, you notice that the file is not located on a CD or DVD. This is a local file. And we're going to print it out on a color printer and then give it to our neighbor and then we'll pick up our check at the bank on the next day. That's how we're going to use Photoshop." Steve Jobs uses the "Photoshop" word to describe the impact that the Macintosh software and Apple's developer tools had on software companies of the time. "Remember when you would go to a photocopier and you bought a cassette tape and you played it back and then you went to a Xerox machine? And that was really primitive compared to the changes in software that we're going to do on the computer. It's the same kind of thing here. We can print an image or any drawing or anything else on paper, and it's only going to be as good as the last image. And when we come back next week it's going to be worse. When we come back next week, we're going to go into our computer, we're going to make a little change to it, and then we're going to go back out to that computer, click the Save button, and then go out next week and print it again. And then we'll wait, and we'll wait for people to come in, and when they do, it'll be okay. It won't be the same thing twice because the software is changing it and making it better. So that's going to be the printing industry, too. It's going to be a lot of software, and it's going to make it easier to do your business. "Well, I'm ready to get started on this. And I'm going to open up Photoshop. I'm going to click the Open file button and select "Ginny and Larry." And then I'm going to click Open. And there's a legend here showing me what different features are available. And I'm going to click on the Layers box at the Reactivity of normal and tumorigenic mouse-embryo-derived cell lines. Different types of mouse embryonal carcinoma cell lines have been maintained as continuous lines. The F9 embryonal carcinoma cells could be established only in culture medium supplemented with an addition of crude pituitary extract. It has been known for long that this tumor cell line does not behave as a mouse embryo in fertilized eggs. The PCC4, 20C and F9-2 lines continuously growing in culture medium without addition of crude pituitary extract have been characterized as normal embryos and F9 tumor-like cell lines, respectively. They showed morphological and biological characteristics of mouse embryos and tumors, respectively. These cell lines were also propagated in culture medium supplemented with crude pituitary extract. The treatments, however, resulted in the suppression of growth and expression of differentiation markers. Furthermore, cell division of normal cell lines ceased in vitro but tumor-like cell lines maintained division activity in vitro. The effect of crude pituitary extract on growth and differentiation of the cells was much more potent in normal cell lines than that on tumor-like cells. Trypsinization-inactivation treatments decreased the expression of differentiation markers and up-regulated the expression of replication-associated antigens in PCC4 cells grown in the presence of pituitary extract. In contrast, cells treated in the absence of crude pituitary extract maintained differentiation markers and low proliferative rate. These results, together with the information given by others, suggest that embryonic and tumor-like cell lines maintain the characteristics of their original cells during continuous cell culture even in presence of crude pituitary extract, i.e. the long-term life-span of normal and tumor cell lines in vitro.
