Little Tools For Everyone is all about small, useful things that everyone can use. 10 Best Tools For Tech Support; 10 Things to Know When Hiring a Tech Support Guy or Girl There's the guy who's quiet, unassuming, and always there to help whenever you need it. And then there's the guy who tells you everything you need to know about your PC problems. Which one do you think is better? Well, the right tech support guy is still quiet and unassuming, but he has the answers to your questions, the right software, and your computer up and running in no time. Of course, there's the tech support guy who has no idea what he's doing, but, hey, if you're willing to pay for his service, he'll tell you about every problem you can think of. And, just maybe, there's a happy medium -- the man or woman in between. To make the best choice, it helps to know what's out there. So, here are 10 things to look for when choosing your next tech support service provider. 1. What's your price range? You might be willing to pay a lot for tech support, but that doesn't mean you have to pay the highest price. Many companies these days offer hourly or daily rates, and there are a few that offer hourly rates at no additional charge. Some of these are only for emergencies, and some are geared toward small businesses who need a certain level of technical support. But the fact is that you can still get great tech support at a low price. Many of the companies that offer hourly rates and no additional charge offer a high level of service for low prices. 2. How many other people are on the network? It's nice to know that there's a tech support professional on the other end of the line when you're calling about a problem. You can ask for a list of technicians to make
