Worldmediaforms.com |.As we move deeper into 2020 and we begin to consider our financial goals, one of the biggest decisions that we must make is how we decide to make payments. Whether we are in the throes of paying off a mortgage or buying a home, purchasing a car or renting an apartment, choosing the right way to pay can actually be one of the biggest financial decisions we make. For the average family, it is so easy to go into a more expensive credit card and rack up interest charges. But with many of us struggling to afford the expense of living, the higher the payments, the more we might have to cut back. Take note: this post doesn't cover specific monetary advice but rather provides financial guidance in the form of three common types of payment options. Should I put my new income into debt or invest it? When we earn money, it is a great decision to put it into a savings account or to pay it into a credit card so that we can make financial goals. The cash can go into the savings account and then be used to help finance a new car or help pay off the mortgage. This can be great in that we help in the development of our savings accounts, and it will free up some money that we would have needed to pay off our existing debts. However, if we are not careful in our spending, it can go into a credit card and then be used to purchase whatever we desire. But we must remember that we need to pay that off eventually. The danger of paying with a credit card can be the interest charges that will start to cost us when we pay off the balance. For example, a $5,000 balance on an interest-bearing card would cost us an annual percentage rate of about 24 percent. Or if you take a look at the variable rate cards, that figure will climb upwards quickly. But it can be easy to say this will never happen to me because I have a good salary and can afford to pay it off. The thing is, we really don't know how much money we will make next year, or
