Be forewarned: If you're interested in learning how to use Photoshop effectively as a developer, you may find yourself a lot more frustrated than if you try to learn on your own. It's truly worth seeking professional training. In-person classes from experts who can guide you are always preferable to attending tutorials alone. In addition to being a fairly advanced image editor, Photoshop serves as a multimedia tool with image retouching, creation, and manipulation features for audio, video, and 3D elements. The program also supports layers for compositing (blending), masking, and masking effects. If you plan on developing your own 3D scenes for use in films, games, or multimedia, be sure to check out the powerful 3D features in Photoshop CS5 Extended and CS6. Photoshop is designed to work in ways that are familiar to anyone who has used other photo-editing software. For those users, Photoshop is a familiar tool because it looks like the other graphics tools they know well. It lacks a straightforward interface, but it doesn't try to hide its tools behind a menu system. It's not as easy to use as some other tools, especially for beginners. However, as a professional tool, Photoshop has a large learning curve associated with it. However, you can still use Photoshop in a bit more of an interactive way than you can with most other programs. As with many computer applications, Photoshop (like many other software programs) becomes easier to use as you gain experience.

Exploring the Interface Photoshop's interface is built around a standard design of windows that changes depending on the type of work that you're doing, as shown in Figure 3-1. Your work window will display the tools that you use most often — often using your mouse to select tools or set options or to create new artwork.

- * Image window: Contains the source image for editing.
- * Layers panel: Layers are used to alter the image at multiple levels.
- * Toolbox: Lists the tools you're using to edit the image and your workspace.
- * Options bar: Features the settings for your tools and workspace.
- * Workspace: Lets you customize your view of the image and the tools

* Brush settings and options —Brush settings include a multitude of options that can be adjusted by pressing the Windows key. These include the size, hardness, color or opacity, and spacing between brushstrokes, and a Stroke option that determines how they are applied. When you paint, new strokes are entered in the Stencil Layer, which are drawn on the canvas. Once you make adjustments to the settings, you can keep them, apply them to all other brushes, or choose one of the preset values. Click the Open dialog box (located in the gear icon menu bar, above the preview image) to open a palette with presets for all sorts of brush strokes and effects. You can create new preset values to use in your next project. You can also change the active brush tool with the left-click menu.

* Brush tools —Each of the three brush tools (Size, Eraser, and Ink) has its own set of settings, just like any other tool. Its Brush tool options include:

- * Size—Choose a brush size from the palette. Brushes are usually created in the 100-pixel range or smaller.

- * Color—Use a color to paint, adjust its strength, or choose from a palette.
- * Spacing—This option allows you to vary the spacing of the stroke's dot pattern.
- * Stroke—The Stroke option determines how the stroke is applied. You can apply a clear stroke (not affected by color or pattern), another object (such as another brush), or an effect stroke (a run of selected colors).
- * Color Sampler—Tick this check box to use color swatches, and click this option to change them.
- * Size Sampler—Tick this check box to use the Size tool in a palette, and click to change the sample size of the brush.
- * New Document—This option creates a new document. Choose this when you switch to the Brush tool after you've created a file.

Q: Unable to call php function from jquery I am trying to get the data from a php file using jquery. I have tried the following codes but it doesn't seem to work. index.php `$(document).ready(function(){ $('#getdata').click(function(){ var path = document.location.pathname; $.ajax({ url: path+'getcustinfo.php', cache:false, success: function(data){ console.log(data); $('#getdata').html(data); } }); }); });` getcustinfo.php A: The problem is that you're trying to output HTML from a.php file, so your console.log is probably getting the string instead of the output generated by the PHP code. You need to JSON.parse the response like this: `$.ajax({ url: 'path/to/file.php', success: function(data) { console.log(JSON.parse(data)); } });` It is known to use a mobile terminal with Internet access to conduct Internet searches.
