Tom Clancy's Splinter Cell Blacklist All DLCs - CorePack. There are some who need the original disc to play this game but the.. Here is a Repack version which has all the dlc unlocked for you!.Now that we've been betrayed once by the company whose logo it is, I think we can all agree that we're better off with T-Mobile. I'm not saying this in a literal sense, like hands-on or on a big TV screen or anything. But hear me out. There's a theory about Apple (AAPL) that goes something like this: Because the company has become so successful, we know that there is no way they can fail to be successful in the long run. And, that success is built on, well, itself. This is how it works: We can't exactly know how Steve Jobs sees the world. But we do know, with some degree of certainty, what the company's goal is and how it's going to accomplish it. And, in this scenario, Apple knows that in order to be successful, it has to do whatever is necessary to make us successful. In short, if Steve Jobs wanted to have healthy, thriving competition in the smartphone world, he would gladly allow that competition to exist if it meant not selling its customers fewer phones. But, Apple never acts in that way. And, why not? Think about it: The iPhone was meant to lead to the end of the mobile phone, right? And, if T-Mobile (TMUS) had been able to sell as many phones as Apple's, it would have helped end the "empire" of the mobile phone altogether. Is Apple doing this just to piss off T-Mobile? Probably. But that isn't what I mean. I mean that, in the real world, Apple doesn't exist to sell more phones. It exists to sell fewer iPhones. I don't mean that in a rebellious sort of way -- no one, even the most rebellious genius, actually wants to die. But rather, in Apple's world, we are all accessories for a product. That's the whole point of the iPhone -- a huge phone in your pocket that only your friends, family and Apple know about (at least until you post it on a blog) -- and only seems to have one meaningful purpose. title: "How to: Copy a Table of Values from an Access Database to a Local Data Table" ms.prod: access ms.assetid: 6c7ce0f7-5946-0ed4-bfd1-e04c9bff1890 ms.date: 06/08/2019 localization_priority: Normal --- # How to: Copy a Table of Values from an Access Database to a Local Data Table To copy the data that you retrieved from an Access table or query to an existing !INCLUDE[vbtecdatasql] table in a local SQL Server database file, you can use the Copy statement. The Copy statement is a powerful tool for building complex databases, especially those with many related tables. The Copy statement supports multiple table types, primary keys, and foreign keys. ## To copy a table of values 1. In the Data box of the Dataset Properties dialog, select the table or query that you want to copy. 2. In the list of tables or queries, select the table or query that you want to copy. The Copy button is grayed out unless you select one of the table or query types. 3. In the Copy dialog box, enter the name of the table or query in the Table name box. To copy data into a new table, enter the name of the table in the Table name box. The default name of the new table is the name of the table that you copied. 4. To copy data only in specific fields, select the Field list, select the fields that you want to copy from the table, then select the Copy button. The fields that you selected will be copied to the table. To copy all the data from the Access table or query to the local SQL Server table, select the Copy button. 5. Click OK
