when youre looking to download content, it is important to stay away from free torrent sites. avoid free websites. in the case of movies, and any other media, this means that you should only get files from torrent sites that are owned by a company that is prepared to offer you the media at a reasonable price. the copyright holders of the media will be looking to make money and to make money they will charge for the media. if that is the case, then you should pay for it, otherwise you will get ripped off. the main thing to remember with torrents is that they are just a way of sharing content. they can be a good way to access content, but it's important to make sure you're supporting the right sites. sites like the pirate bay are not above the law, but the way you access and browse content is. please don't ever get yourself and your internet connection into trouble if you're planning on downloading content illegally. bottom line, if you are looking for a network to use for browsing the web or checking email, a public tracker may be best. on the other hand if you are looking for a network to share movies, games, etc. then public is a no go. well how do you tell? well in a nutshell a public tracker is usually free to join, easy to setup and access, legal to use and does not log any information. to be explicit, a private tracker is usually invite only, protected by a password and only those who have been approved by the admin have access and they only have access to those files they have been approved to access. of course the downside is that it can be expensive to join and usually require more time for setup. often the setup is only done by their tech staff rather than on a going-forward basis. this can be a good thing or a bad thing depending upon the person or company involved. usually it's a bad thing. even so, these types of private trackers are often the best because of the ability to customize their setup. this can range from customizing the client, to the ability to limit the bandwidth, to completely setup file permissions and how files are displayed to the client. in other words a private tracker can do it all from a software perspective or a database. the upside to a private tracker is customization!

there is no absolute rule about what percentage of seeders to encourage in a torrent. a good rule of thumb is to work from the 60% of seeders to 80% of leechers, which is what most software will default to. usually, if you click on the “open magnet link” button in the download dialog, or send out a magnet link via a private message, rather than opening it from the browser, you are obviously encouraging leeching. also, anywhere between 20% and 30% of seeders has been considered a good rule of thumb. seeding and leeching are both illegal, but the purpose of each activity is somewhat different. leeching is where a torrent user downloads a movie without sharing it with other users. this could be done for several reasons: maliciously sharing the file with a horde of viewers, such as a botnet, or just because the user doesn't care about the work they are downloading.

leeching also benefits no one other than the leecher, who is saving money without sharing it. if there's a movie you've been dying to download, but you haven't been able to find it anywhere on thepiratebay, try looking for a torrent of that movie on a site like the pirate bay. torrents of movies are usually easier to find in this forum than on sites like the pirate bay. this is because they are largely advertised to viewers and have a section where users have submitted links. try to avoid downloading things that you think will get you in trouble. many countries have harsh laws against torrenting copyrighted material, but before you know it you will have your personal information leaked to the media and law enforcement. a good idea is to check if the download page itself has any warnings about copyright infringement. if not, then theres a decent chance that theres no legal issues.
