Effects of ipriflavone and leuprorelin in breast carcinoma. The purpose of this study is to compare and analyze the effects of ipriflavone and leuprorelin on cancer cells. Additionally, the effects of the cyclooxygenase inhibitor, ipriflavone, were studied for its role in the use of leuprorelin as a treatment for cancer in conjunction with conventional anticancer drugs. Electrophoretic mobility shift assay (EMSA) was used to show the formation of nuclear proteins containing the NRF-1, Nrf2, Ap-1, NFkappaB and CREB sequences. Immunocytochemical staining was used to determine the expression of S phase-associated protein Ki-67. We found an increase in the expression of NRF-1 and Nrf2 protein as well as CREB binding motif in the cells treated with 2.5 microM ipriflavone for 20 h. When combined with doxorubicin, leuprorelin and ipriflavone caused an inhibition of estrogen-dependent growth and induction of apoptosis. To study the regulation of apoptosis genes, we evaluated the expression of Bax and Fas protein. We found a decrease in Bax and an increase in Fas expression. We conclude that the combined treatment of suboptimal concentrations of ipriflavone and leuprorelin induces growth inhibition by apoptosis in breast cancer cells and that the effect is ER independent and NFkappaB independent. Acanthostega Acanthostega (from Ancient Greek, akantha, "thorn" + stegos, "foot", literally "thorn-footed") is an ichthyosaur from the Triassic Period. Taxonomy Acanthostega was first described in 1879 by Friedrich von Huene and regarded as a new genus of Ichthyosaurus. Acanthostega was originally described as a coelosaur, a plesiosaur which may have also resembled a ichthyosaur. In the 1990s, Acanthostega was accepted as an ichthyosaur, for example as one of the Pholidosauridae. In 2001, Balaner et al. described a new genus, Handiichthys, and assigned Acanthostega to the ichthyosauriform family, Propelydistidae. However
